French President Emmanuel Macron, who called this month for a new EU vote on Catalonia, has so far not committed himself to such a vote and officials in Berlin say the issue is only "one of many" high-ranking priorities for the EU summit, following the divisive Brexit vote a week ago.

But the leaders of France and Germany left no doubt that on the issue of Spain's Catalonia region, any future resolution must apply directly to the highly decentralized model of the EU, where most of the 27 member nations have at least some degree of control over their own affairs. "With regard to what's happening in Catalonia, we have been clear that the territory must be excluded from the EU treaties," German Chancellor Angela Merkel told reporters on Monday when asked if she could back the French proposal for a new vote.

"We expect that the situation should be decided by Spain and Spain's parliament. That's the way it is in Germany, in France, and in the Netherlands and in the majority of other European countries," Merkel said. "We also heard that there are some calls for a confrontation between Spain and the Catalans. But we think that that 3da54e8ca3
